Sonnet

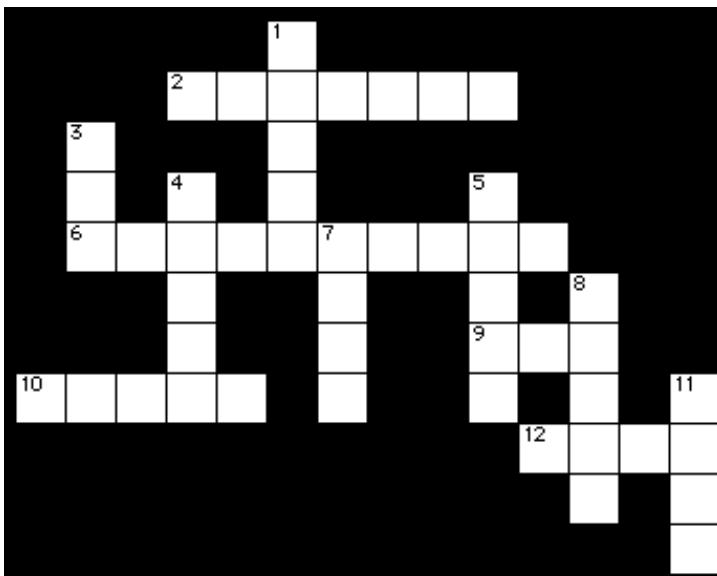

By Ananyaa Prakash

What shall I say about my tragic loss?
A teenager, with wings on my feet and
Bounce in my step, hop, skip, jumping across,
Could not now get up by myself and stand.

This unwelcome intruder in my brain,
Robbed me of everything that I had gained.
Ruthlessly stole my dance, causing me pain,
All my willful actions were now constrained.

Time passes, I come to a realization,
Changes are happening all around me.
I have pondered in my meditation
To accept the new me, and then be free.
As I look back at how I was before
Distress is not part of me anymore.

Ananyaa writes: "I am 18, a senior in high school. I have medulloblastoma but have been in remission for two years."
